

Greater Seattle

World Center of Excellence in

Environmental Studies

The Greater Seattle area is a leader in change. Many of our Washington institutions offer unique programs focusing on the ways in which natural resources and environmental policies affect human health, and environmental sustainability. Our region offers outstanding research and academic programs surrounded by unparalleled natural beauty.

Schools Programs

Associates Programs

Clark Community College	A.S. Environmental Science
Everett Community College	A.A. Environmental Studies
Green River College	A.S. Environmental Science
Shoreline Community College	A.A. Environmental Studies A.S. Environmental Science
Seattle Central Community College	A.S. Environmental Science

Bachelor Programs

Antioch University	B.A. Leadership & Sustainable Business Concentration
Central Washington University	B.A. Environmental Geo-sciences
Eastern Washington University	B.A. Environmental Studies
Evergreen State College	Environmental Studies
Gonzaga University	B.A. Environmental Studies
North West University (Kirkland)	B.S. Environmental Science
Pacific Lutheran University	B.A. Environmental Studies
Seattle University	B.A. Environmental Studies B.S. Environmental Science
University of Puget Sound	B.S. Environmental Science Environmental Policy & Decision Making
University of Washington	More than 50 independent Degree-granting units to collaborative research centers at all the University of Washington locations
Washington State University	B.S. & B.A Options in Pullman and Vancouver
Western Washington University	B.A. Environmental Studies

Why Washington? Our region's schools have access to diverse topography, from the Puget Sound to the Okanagan National Forest. With programs offered in all sizes, it's easy to find a program tailored to your needs.

Western Washington University's Huxley School of Environment one of the oldest Colleges of Environment.

WSU has a unique Bear Research, Education and Conservation Center at its Pullman Location